

King's Fund

Date revised: 28 April 2014

Description

The King's Fund database is produced by the Information & Library Service at this independent UK health charity. It covers policy and management of health and social-care services in the UK rather than clinical issues and treatments. The library collection is particularly rich in official UK health policy documents, and in informally published – 'grey' – literature from health and social care organizations. Articles with abstracts, indexed from English-language journals, are included, together with books, reports, pamphlets, Web publications, strategic planning documents and government circulars. Please note that due to how the data is supplied, there is occasionally less than optimal indexing/display of certain data items.

The database stopped updating on PQD at the end of 2017, but remains available for searching as a 'closed' file.

AB Abstract (summary) Translate

Kathryn Ecclestone worries about inappropriate educational interventions that promote emotional openness and pathologise normal responses, but Ben Robinson and Sarah Wheeler point to evidence showing better outcomes in patients who have been encouraged to express what they are feeling.
