Patentee Codes

Introduction

Section 1 of this manual contains an alphabetical listing in company name order of the 21,000 companies which have been assigned Derwent standard four-letter codes, in a standardised 30-character format.

Section 2 contains the listing in Derwent standard code order.

Application and use of Company Codes

For each patent entered into the Derwent system the patentee is assigned a four-letter code. All patentees carried on the original source document are assigned codes, and the code is normally based on the name of the patentee.

Prior to 1992 a maximum of four patentees per patent specification or family were assigned codes. In cases where a company and an individual were joint patentees only the company name and code were recorded, and where several individuals were joint patentees only the first individual's name and code were recorded.

Derwent uses the codes rather than the patentee names to generate patentee indexes. The codes can be used to improve online retrieval.

When retrieving online or from patentee indexes, first check if the patentee has a standard code either by using this manual or by using the Patentee Code look-up facility on the Derwent Web site (<http://www.clarivate.com/>). If no standard code is identified, use the rules in Section 3 of this manual to determine the code.

Standard Codes

From 1963 to 1969 all patentees, including individuals, were assigned four-letter codes. Since 1970 unique codes have been assigned to companies who make a significant number of patent applications. These companies and their four-letter codes are termed 'standard', all other companies are treated as 'non-standard'.

For larger companies which are part of a group recognisable subsidiaries are normally assigned the same standard code. For example the code PENN is used for:

Pennsalt Chem Corp	Pennwalt France SA
Pennsylvania Salt Mfg Co	Pennwalt Holland BV
Pennwalt Corp	Pennwalt Ltd

However, in certain cases, such as Japanese conglomerates (Mitsubishi, Toshiba, Hitachi, etc.) individual subsidiaries may be given their own codes.

Changes of Name, Mergers

When a company changes its name the standard code is retained, so that Bayer AG, formerly Farbenfabriken Bayer AG, is still coded FARB, for example. This allows continuity for storage and search purposes.

If two organisations (with standard patent assignee codes) merge, Derwent's standard policy is to continue to apply the standard patent assignee code for each organisation as long as patents filed under the names of the independent organisations continue to appear.

For example, following the merger of Sandoz (SANO) and Ciba (CIBA) to form Novartis, the SANO and CIBA codes continued to be applied to those patents filed under the names of Sandoz and Ciba. These codes may ultimately become dormant if ongoing filings are made under the Novartis name for which a new standard code 'NOVS' was created.

Note that Derwent does not automatically assign a new standard company code when two large companies merge or are involved in takeovers/demergers etc. Each case is assessed individually and the most appropriate action taken. So in the case of Novartis (merger) and Zeneca (demerger from ICI) new codes were created, but with Smithkline Beecham, Bristol-Myers Squibb and Glaxo Wellcome one existing code was retained and the other abandoned.

Patentee codes are not generally changed retrospectively as Derwent does not track the assignment of patent rights from one organisation to another.

Non-Standard Codes

Where a company is not in this manual, or is not a recognisable subsidiary of a company in this manual, then it will be given a 'non-standard' code.

In 90% of cases the 'non-standard' code is simply based on the first four letters of the first word of the patentee name. In printed products these first few letters are followed by a hyphen (-) for non-standard companies, an equals sign (=) for Russian (Soviet) institutions, or an oblique sign (/) for individuals.

For example:

GOLDWELL AG	GOLD-
JOHNSON P S C	JOHN/

In the online database the first four letters are followed by -N for non-standard companies, -R for Russian (Soviet) institutions or -I for individuals.

For example:

RHOEN-KLINIKUM AG	RHON-N
VOLRAL J P	VOLR-I

Certain words are ignored or abbreviated for coding purposes. This is done to minimise the incidence of companies being assigned the same code. Even so, 'non-standard' codes are not necessarily unique and the same code may be applied to unrelated patentees.

Rules for coding 'non-standard' patentees are listed in Section 3 of this manual.

Patentee Name Abbreviation

In order to output a meaningful name within the 30 characters available certain commonly occurring words in corporate patentee names are abbreviated. A list of abbreviations used by Derwent is given in Appendix 3, Abbreviated Word List.

Russian (Soviet) Institutions

Russian (Soviet) Institutions are firstly translated into English, and then only the significant words, suitably abbreviated, are taken in order to generate a name. The code applied is based on the abbreviated translation. For 'non-standard' names the code is followed by an equals sign (=).

For example:

INSTITUT YADERNOI ENERGETIKI AKADEMII NAUK
BELORUSSKOI SSR

is translated to: INSTITUTE NUCLEAR POWER ACADEMY OF SCIENCES BELORUSSIAN SSR
 and output as: AS BELO NUCLEAR POWER INST ABNU=

Particular abbreviations for 'Soviet' Academies, Republics, Cities and Regions are used, as these occur frequently. These are listed in Appendix 4, 'Soviet' Patentees.

Japanese Companies

Japanese corporate patentee names appear on source documents in both translated and transliterated forms. Where these names are 'standard' both versions are listed and are given the same code.

To assist in the identification of possible synonyms of Japanese companies a glossary of Japanese/English words commonly used in company names is given in Appendix 5.

Summary of Code Formats on File

For retrieval purposes it is important to note the different formats of codes which exist in Derwent indexes and online files over different periods:

1974 (week 197403) to date:

Indexes	Online
ABCD	ABCD	Standard companies and all pre-1970 companies
ABCD-	ABCD-N	Non-standard companies (except 'Soviet')
ABCD=	ABCD-R	'Soviet' non-standard institutions from week 197517
ABCD/	ABCD-I	Individuals

1970 - 1974 (week 197402):

Indexes	Online
ABCD	ABCD	Standard companies and all pre-1970 companies
ABC -	ABC-N	All non-standard companies
ABC /	ABC-I	Individuals

Pre-1970:

ABCD	All patentees (companies and individuals)

New Codes

When a new standard code is introduced Derwent, where possible, assigns the same letters which comprised the non-standard code, and drops the hyphen. However, if the code is already in use for another 'standard' company, then a nearby unused code is chosen. This ensures, where possible, that in cumulated patentee indexes the entries for the company fall in the same relative position.

The code for indexing is always based on the patentee of the current document. Where the code of the Basic is different, due to assignment of a new standard code, then both are quoted in our headings and the first time this occurs the new code and name are added to our master and online files.

This means, for example, that a patent originally issuing in the name of an individual, but later issuing elsewhere in the name of a company would have added to its record the name and code of the company.

Before week 197642 Derwent assigned a code to a Basic patent and indexed all future equivalents under that code, even though the equivalent patentee, as quoted in the equivalent heading, may have been different.
