Originally developed by The Liposome Company, a subsidiary of Elan Corp plc (now Perrigo), and marketed by several other companies, including Teva Pharmaceutical Industries and its subsidiaries and, in North America, by Sigma-Tau (under licensed from Enzon), the iv infusion, liposomal formulation of amphotericin B (Abelcet) is indicated for the treatment of presumed fungal infections in febrile, neutropenic patients, and for the treatment of cryptococcal meningitis in HIV-infected patients. It is also indicated in the treatment of patients with other invasive fungal infections, including those of the Candida and Aspergillus species, where treatment with amphotericin B deoxycholate has been unsuccessful or is precluded due to unacceptable toxicity or renal impairment. Abelcet was approved in the US, in November 1995. In November 2002, Enzon acquired rights to Abelcet in North America, including marketing rights in the US. In January 2010, Enzon sold its specialty pharmaceutical business to Sigma-Tau Group. By January 2018, the drug had been launched by Leadiant Biosciences (formerly Sigma-Tau Pharmaceuticals) in the US. Amphotericin B is considered the treatment of choice for most of the invasive fungal infections like disseminated candidiasis, pulmonary aspergillosis, zygomycosis, and fusariosis. Amphotericin B lipid complex or Abelcet was developed to reduce the toxicity and maximize the therapeutic utility of amphotericin B in invasive fungal infections. It has shown less nephrotoxicity as compared to conventional amphotericin B therapy.
