A well-referenced manuscript is central to sound, robust research. The problem is that organizing, adding and formatting your bibliographic information can take a lot of time, which is a scarce resource for academics.

Academia isn’t a 9 to 5 job. According to recent surveys by Nature and Times Higher Education, around 40% of academics work more than 60 hours a week, and a lot of their actual research takes place at the weekend. Undergraduate students and PhD candidates are also known to feel the burden of long hours, often in response to intense expectation from the wider academic system.

1) Save and share entire reference lists with a click of a button
2) Cite while you write
3) Don’t let rejections slow down your research

Get organized, save time and fly through your next paper.
