Filing for Patents

Inventions are patentable. The patent office considers animals to be patentable. Computer programs can also claim protection.

Applications may be made, in Japanese, by the invention or his legal successor. Foreign applicants must designate a Japanese representative. From January 1996, the Japanese Patent Office has allowed filing in English, although patentees still have to supply a translation in Japanese within 23 months. The English version is the final arbiter in disputes on quality of translations affecting scope of invention.

The application is laid open to public inspection after 18 months from the date of filing, or the earliest priority date, if priority has been claimed and is published in the patent gazette. Upon acceptance the complete examined specification is published in the official gazette.

For patents granted on or after 1 April 2015, opposition must be filed within six months of the announcement of grant. The patentee (but not the opponent) may appeal the Patent Office decision to the IP High Court.

XX	2 digit Japanese Imperial year
xx	1 or 2 digit Japanese Imperial year
YYYY	4 digit Western year
Nnnnnn	1 to 6 digit serial number
nnnnnn	7 digit serial number

Notes:

Whilst the Japanese year officially begins on 1 January each year, the actual calculation of the Imperial year is based on the Emperor's reign:

Showa Era	To 8 January 1989	Imperial Year: Western year minus 25	Example: 1988 Western year = 63 Imperial year
Heisei Era	From 9 January 1989	Imperial Year: Western year minus 88	Example: 1992 Western year = 4 Imperial year

When the Era changed the serial part of the application numbers formed part of a continuous series and did not revert to 1. The last application under the Showa Era was serial number 3200 (JP64003200-A) .

Printed applications issued by the Japanese Patent Office carried the year 64 until their changeover was completed on 11 April 1989. DWPI has converted these years to the Heisei Imperial year from serial number 3201 onwards

From the Western year 2000, the Imperial year is no longer used in patent numbering.
